PICTON

PRINCE EDWARD COUNTY, bounded by the waters of Lake Ontario and the beautiful Bay of Quinte, offers unusual inducements to campers and tourists. Its shady drives over good roads, bordered by well-kept farms and orchards; its inland lakes abounding in bass and perch, and the larger surrounding waters well supplied with maskinonge, whitefish, and pike; the unsurpassed duck hunting on Hay Bay, which is fifteen miles long, and made memorable by the United Empire Loyalists' settlements on its shores; its natural wonders, as shewn in the Lake on the Mountain at Glenora, and the five miles of sandbanks on the southern shore, all add to the attractiveness of this picturesque district. The scenery of the Bay is too well known to need description. It is sufficient to say that it compares favourably with that of Muskoka and the Thousand Islands of the St. Lawrence.

The county town of Picton is a neat, up-to-date town of over four thousand people, with stores that are its pride, that are unequalled in any other town of its size in Canada. It has Churches of all denominations, a Collegiate Institute that would be a credit to any place, good Public and Separate Schools, a Carnegie Free Library, four fine Banks, and many beautiful residences. Favorite summer resorts within a few miles of Picton are Glen Island, The Sandbanks, and the pretty village of Wellington, all well supplied with hotels and cottages. Prince Edward County apples, small fruits, and tomatoes are noted and find a ready market, besides keeping busy numerous canning factories and evaporators. Other industries are a stove foundry, a large seedhouse, cheese factories, whey butter factories, and grist mills, while Glenora is the home of the Little Giant Turbine Wheel. The Bay and sheltered harbour form a Paradise for yachts and motorboats, of which Picton itself has a fleet of more than fifty.

During the summer, steamers connect daily with Rochester, N.Y., and twice a week with Toronto and Montreal, while smaller ones ply daily between Picton, Belleville, Kingston, Desoronto, Trenton, and Napanee, and excursions to those ports are of frequent occurrence.

Any person desiring information as to hotel or boarding-house accommodation, of which there is ample, and that of the best and most moderate in price, also as to the best means of reaching this favored spot, can receive it gladly on application to the Picton Yacht Club.
